

& The Giclée Printing Process

A giclée print is quite simply the closest replication of an original artwork that is currently possible. The popularity of giclée prints is skyrocketing and some experts believe that in just a few short years, giclées will supplant lithographs as the preferred art form among discriminating collectors.

“Pioneer Inn Moon” by Ben Saber

At Lahaina Printsellers we create our own giclées, employing state-of-the-art equipment and professional designers who are skilled in the digital arts

Thanks to modern technology and an immense amount of research and development, we now produce an extensive array of images on canvas for a fraction of the price of the original. These re-creations are produced in-house and are available exclusively from us.

The precision of the printing, combined with the color depth and the superior materials, captures every subtlety and nuance of an original image whether it was created from watercolors, oils or acrylics.

We use only the finest materials worthy of our high resolution scans and offer our images on premium water proof canvas. We use pigmented inks and this coupled with our canvas substrate creates a product which is not only completely waterproof but the image is guaranteed not to fade or shift for over 100 years!

At every stage of the giclée production process, we employ the most exacting standards possible and for this reason, we believe that Lahaina Printsellers prints are the finest available on the market.

“Lovely Leis” by Gill

